² The brands in the table below are recommended by the Australian Glycemic Index Foundation as being low GI. They are available in Australia and some items are available in New Zealand.

³ Because of the potential of juices to elevate blood sugar, limit the consumption of pure, unsweetened juices (without added sugar, corn syrup, grape juice or pineapple juice) to half a cup mixed with half a cup of water for apple, orange (with or without pulp), peach, pear, grapefruit and pineapple juice.

A word about diet foods

Walk down any supermarket aisle and you be tempted by products packaged with words "diet", "low fat", "low kJ", "no fat", "weight loss", "fat loss", "guilt-free", "lean", "balanced diet", "healthy", "less" and "stay in shape". Don't be fooled!

According to a report published by Australian Consumer watchdog, Choice, in 2013 "Many diet products tend to be highly processed, salty, sugary treat foods with little nutritional value." Remember, YBYW follows a real food philosophy: consuming foods as close to their raw state as possible. With a view to minimise processed foods with added salt, sugar, preservatives, colours and flavour, we recommend you only consume "diet" foods as a treat.
